

A new year message from IRLA

As the UK begins another lockdown following an alarming increase in positive covid tests and hospital admissions, we are looking beyond the next few weeks with hope and determination.

With vaccine programmes being rolled out on a massive scale, we can see glimmers of light on the horizon. The UK has currently already administered more vaccines to its residents than the rest of Europe combined. We are grateful to the scientists, doctors and health workers who have worked tirelessly to achieve this, and to our health service - which we are now trying to protect.

We continue to provide our members, colleagues and industry with information, updates and togetherness as we work as normal, from home (with occasional solo office visits!) We can be contacted here with any enquiries you may have. This continual contact is more vital now than ever, as we find ourselves increasingly apart and/or alone.

Our events schedule continues to be affected, but we remain hopeful and committed to our planned events from Spring 2021 onwards. In the meantime, we will continue to offer on-line learning and remote meetings, please check the website for up-to-date information.

Good health and best wishes to you all for 2021.

Leslie-Ann Giovnilli

IRLA Head of Learning & Development
