

A request from the Insurance Museum

IRLA is proud to follow and support the Insurance Museum. The work of the museum is vital in keeping the history of insurance alive. As they explain:

" By sharing the story of insurance, the events, the people and the complex workings of risk; we can educate, build awareness, trust and confidence in our profession.

Exploring the themes of what insurance enables and what it could enable in the future, will provide opportunities to attract new talent and business to the world of insurance.

In the process of capturing and sharing this story we will discover more about our provenance and be better able to nurture our heritage stories for all audiences, including future generations, to learn, enjoy and benefit from. "

The museum is currently appealing for new items to enhance their displays and further increase awareness of their place in continuing the insurance story, for generations to come.

As the slow but steady return to the office begins, please take a look around your offices and if you discover any memorabilia or items of interest please contact the Insurance Museum.

Further information on the work of the museum can be found by clicking here.